

Management Reading List

Worth your time, in a rough order that matches the first year. Read the first two before you read anything else; the rest keep well on a shelf until you need them.

Start here

- Something on one-to-ones. The habit matters more than the framework.
- Something on feedback. Specific, timely, about behaviour rather than character.

Once you have a few months in

- Delegation, and being at peace with work you could do faster yourself.
- Hiring and structured interviewing.
- Performance conversations, including the difficult ones.

Later, when the team grows

- Organisational design and the cost of coordination.
- Managing managers, and how your feedback loop gets longer.
- Strategy, so your roadmap is a set of choices rather than a wish list.

How to read these

Pick one idea per book and try it for a fortnight. A book you applied once beats five you agreed with. Bring the results to your own one-to-one - your manager is a better sounding board than the author.
